Tax Unimproved Lands.

It has been alleged over and over again that this Colony, but especially Vancouver Island, has been seriously injured in consequence of lands owned by private parties being unoccupied and merely held for speculative purposes. This allegation is the prevailing opinion in town and country. In political meetings, in the press, on the hustings, and in the Legislature it has cropped out over and over again. Unimproved lands have in short been voted a public evil; and the remedy suggested on all sides is "an unimproved land tax." Now, we are fully prepared to admit both the existence of the evil, and the wisdom of the remedy for it. We at the same time believe that there is not as much land withheld from cultivation by land speculators in this part of the Colony as many persons are led to imagine. On Vancouver Island there are not at the highest estimate more than 25,000 acres. What quantity there may be on Fraser river and in the interior, we have not the means of determining, but we question whether the quantity is large. When one, however, rides out of Victoria into the country, particularly in the direction of Metochin and Saanich, the extent of apparently unoccupied land and the paucity of settlers forces itself upon the attention of the east observer. The cause of this condition of things, we fear, is mainly due to the fact that the owners would neither sell at a fair price, nor rent at such a rate as would enable a farmer to occupy and cultivate it. It would consequently be impossible to convince persons familiar with the country around Victoria, that there is not a radical evil at work in keeping this land unoccupied from year to year. Now, we repeat again that we admit the evil; and we hold that like other evils, the Legislature should be applied to for an act to provide a remedy. So long as popular action is confined to denouncing the evil, there will be very little division of opinion. When, however, a remedy, and that remedy a tax on each acre of land, is suggested, then it is that difference of opinion arises, and the difficulty of imposing such a tax justly becomes apparent. The first difficulty is to define what shall be understood as unoccupied private lands. Next, the lands differ in quality. Some tracts are good arable land; others are rocky, with little land; and a third, is barren; a fourth is a dense impenetrable forest; whilst a fifth may possess all these qualities together. It must be very apparent that it would be very unjust to impose as high a tax on a rocky tract as would be imposed on an equal quantity of first-class arable land. Again a few head of sheep or stock may graze over a piece of land, and the question arises whether the land is occupied or not. Men may be chopping down the trees on it for cord-wood, and the question comes up whether the land is occupied or not. If occupation be admitted in both cases, still the land would remain uncultivated, and no tax would be imposed. Now, without entering largely into details to show the difficulty of providing a just remedy for the evil connected with unoccupied land, we must say that the simplest and most direct way would be to impose a tax on each acre of whatever the land defined to be unoccupied land. But it is apparent that this remedy would operate unequally, owing to the different qualities of land, and, therefore, it would, in some respects, be very oppressive. To obviate that, the land might be assessed, and a tax levied on its assessed value. Possibly, this would be more simple and just. A third remedy has been suggested that has the merit, in our opinion, of being more just than either of the other modes of taxing unimproved and unoccupied lands, viz.: That no land shall be taxed in consequence of being unimproved and unoccupied, unless it shall have been first established that the owner of the land could have rented it at a reasonable rent, and had refused to do so. Then, and in that case, his land should be taxed till it became occupied and cultivated. This mode of imposing the tax would secure the owner against paying taxes on land that he could not rent. Otherwise, in many instances in this country, the owner of the land would, though unable to rent it, have to pay the tax. If such a remedy as this were provided, there ought, to make it effectual in settling up the lands, be a provision that any person who wished to rent a certain tract of land could, after the owner had refused to rent it on reasonable terms, complain to the nearest magistrate of the refusal, and the magistrate, on making a due and formal inquiry into the matter and finding it correct, should be empowered to issue an order for the tax to be levied. The operation, though somewhat slow, would have the merit of possessing a higher degree of justice than either of the two other modes of taxing unoccupied lands. Still another mode of reaching the owners of unoccupied lands has been suggested: that is by simply increasing the road tax on such lands—making the road tax higher than on improved and occupied lands. Whichever of these remedies may be adopted, or whatever remedy may be deemed the most desirable, there can be no question but a remedy ought to be provided. We must say, however, that we doubt the possibility of any remedy ever being made, unless the present Six-by-Nine Council shall have been changed to an elective body with twenty-four to thirty members, under Responsible Government.

The London Spectator says:—We do not profess to have any clear view of the amount of national spirit for the war now existing in France. The Daily News reports with an air of absolute knowledge that there is little or none, and that the whole country is longing for peace. But we believe it is questionable that the department of the Loire-et-Cher has voted 4,000,000 francs (£160,000) for the war; that Toulouse has voted 1,500,000 francs (£60,000), and Bayonne 300,000 francs (£12,000); that the Council of Calvados has voted 3,000,000 francs (£120,000) for the defence fund; that fourteen departments of the west of France are leaguering themselves to raise resources and troops, and have already raised 15,000,000 francs (£600,000) for this purpose; and that this movement is steadily spreading throughout the country. There is, thus, nearly a million sterling voted within a few days from municipal and private sources to aid the resources of the Central Government, and we do not suppose that we have nearly enumerated all that has been done. Does this look so very like the passionate wish for peace—the despair of a spiritless population?

FRUITS OF TWISTING A MULE'S TAIL.—A La Crosse (Wis.) paper tells the following: "Not long since, while one of the river boats was taking on some live stock, among the lot was one large gray mule, that refused to walk the staging. The mate sung out to a roustabout to 'twist his tail, and he'd come.' A corner's jury had decided that the man came to his death by obeying orders."
